Title:	The Greatest Love of All

Caption:	An old couple sharing their last best moments hand in hand
Commentary:	This is a frequently asked question: if you were about to die in 10 minutes, what would you choose to do? Most peoples' answer is not doing something daring or exciting, but to hold their loves' hand and care for them even for their last minute. In this photo, you can see an old couple holding their hands, having a walk in a park. They are in their seventies, perhaps, and the passion towards possessions and emulations has vanished completely in their life. All they want is a life of peace and joy, which lets share their happiest moments. In fact, when they were young, they might once pursue wealth eagerly like most people do today, but eventually, when they are now old and no longer have the vitality to go after everything they desire, they may choose the simplest thing -- love. But the truth is, in this busy city of Hong Kong, people often treat wealth and success as their top pursuits. And now, they have forgotten this uttermost virtue. Love is not always cherished. People think they have a lot of time, and they deserve to find the best husband or wife. So they make decisions without deliberation: they get married, get divorced, get married again, then get divorced again! They consider love as a tool and something additional, which has twisted the original meaning of love. If they can take one minute to think, I am confident that Hong Kong people can figure out its true meaning.
