Title:	I want to brush my teeth...

Caption:	A Cambodian boy having dental check in a church during my short-term mission 23 July, 07
Commentary :	We are lucky. We are blessed. Economics teaches me, people’s desires are unlimited while resources are limited. Hongkongers try to seize more and more to fulfil our needs every day by utilizing technology, nature and people at maximum. We actually do not realize what we have and who we are. It is so good that we have free dental services during the six primary school life. However, this Cambodian boy, one of the millions of children, has not ever tasted any toothpaste, neither in strawberry nor mint. It is so funny that we have the tradition of not sending shoes to others during birthday. However, they have their bare foot to go to school, buy food and play. Well, slippers are treasure. It is pleasing to see that the little girl on the left hand side is willing to help her father with the dental checks of over 200 children. However, the boy in the picture does not know who his father is. Died of AIDS? I do not know because he does not know too. You may say, there is no need to compare as everybody has different lives, and they do not want the so-called wealthy people to sympathize. “Yes” to some extent. While we understand that we are born in a blessed place with everything around, seldom do people treasure and be grateful. Instead we do our utmost to chase for unlimited fame, money, status and self-esteem. No one knows if we are happy, but I can tell you this boy did after the check and the brush. If we still do not be thankful and know how to appreciate, we are not the ones who are lucky and blessed, but them.
